

What does your co-creation rose garden look like?

Making space for reflections has been valuable for the evaluation and project teams working on the ¡Adelante, STEAM! project. We find sharing across the teams to be helpful to refine our own practices.

We invite you grab some sticky notes and join us in sharing reflections about co-creation – whether you are just getting started or have been practicing this approach for a long time!

Roses

Celebrating and sharing what has worked well when doing co-creation:

- What has been working well?
- What are you proud of?
- What are you excited about?

Thorns

Identifying what we need to change or how we can do better when using a co-creation approach:

- What have you struggled with?
- What roadblocks have you hit?
 - What help do you need?

Buds

Finding opportunities for growth and discovering potential when doing co-creation:

- What new perspectives or directions do you want to explore?
- How can we continue to develop the processes we currently use?